

Time running out to see three Native American artists at Chickasaw Country locations

Photos and paintings on display through June 30

OKLAHOMA CITY– (June 22, 2018) Time is running out to view the work of three American Indian artists—Billy Hensley, Paula Loftin and Daniel Worcester—at three separate Chickasaw Country locations in south-central Oklahoma.

The shows, which started on March 1, 2018, will end on June 30, 2018. Visitors can view Hensley’s paintings at the Chickasaw Nation Welcome Center in Davis, Oklahoma; Loftin’s photography at the Chickasaw Visitor Center in Sulphur, Oklahoma; and Worcester’s photography at the Chickasaw Nation Information Center in Tishomingo, Oklahoma.

“Each of these artists bring a unique vision to their artwork and blend the traditional with the contemporary in unexpected ways” said Paige Williams Shepherd, director of corporate development and tourism for the Chickasaw Nation. “We hope everyone has a chance to view this incredible artwork before these shows come to a close.”

Billy Hensley, Chickasaw Nation Welcome Center, Davis, Oklahoma

Hensley brings modern Chickasaw culture to the mainstream art scene by creating paintings that incorporate native Chickasaw culture with unique techniques. His work has earned him a spot in the Chickasaw traveling exhibition, “Visual Voices,” which began this month at the Fred Jones Jr. Museum of Art in Norman and will continue to travel around the country.

“I strive to focus on what it meant to be Chickasaw long ago, and what it means to be Chickasaw in today’s world,” says Hensley. “I find inspiration for my work in everyday life and through the nostalgia that being Chickasaw brings.”

Throughout his adult life Billy has practiced and studied art, but he remains a mostly self-taught artist. With the desire to help bring Chickasaw artists into the global art community, Hensley said he continuously works toward developing new skills and improving current techniques.

“I feel the viewer interprets the work through their own life lenses, and that is where the meaning truly lies,” Hensley said.

Paula Loftin, Chickasaw Visitor Center, Sulphur Oklahoma

Loftin, a Chickasaw citizen and Oklahoma native, carries a lifelong love of photography, horses, cowboys and the Western lifestyle. She combines those interests with a unique artistic talent that captures the heart of western life.

Whether it's cowboys, ranch life, mustangs in the wild or beautiful landscapes and nature, Loftin captures the essence of today's West and brings it alive. Her sharp photography provides a unique, enjoyable look into modern Western culture.

Daniel Worcester, Chickasaw Nation Information Center, Tishomingo, Oklahoma

Worcester is a member of the Chickasaw Nation and has been capturing works of art through a lens since receiving his first camera as a gift in 1966. Worcester then borrowed a Cannon 35mm from a friend, and his love for photography quickly grew. Black and white photography became the mainstay of capturing his subjects on film.

Worcester transitioned to digital photography in 2007 when he began producing his own commercial images. His current compositions include "Native Americans in Pop Culture and Advertising" and images capturing natural Chickasaw surroundings throughout Oklahoma.

Inducted into the Chickasaw Hall of Fame in 2009, Worcester was also named Honored One at the 2013 Red Earth Festival in Oklahoma City and given the 2017 Silver Feather Award by the Chickasaw Nation. He has received many prestigious awards for his continuing work in the art of bladesmithing as well as writing three books of poetry.
